"In the issue last month we exposed the truths that good and evil are relative to the observer and how one person's good could be another person's evil".

The Nature of Existence

By Pat Powell

The purpose of our existence on this plane is to gather and accumulate the vast richness of experiences which are capable of being generated within this plane's laws of nature.

I also believe that there are other planes that we can transition to which offer different rules and different laws of nature, thereby generating different experiences.

I believe that when our flesh eventually dies we transition to another plane of existence and I hold to be true that our purpose there will also be to seek out the unique opportunities for new experiences.

In another plane there might not be any matter or gravity, even moving up or down might not be possible in another plane of existence. In other planes of existence there might be completely new forces of nature that we could not even imagine and these new forces would force from us completely new experiences which would not be possible on any other plane.

Good and Evil; Negative VS Positive energy

By Pat Powell

In last month's issue we explored the notion of Good and Evil Negative Vs Positive energy. In the issue last month we exposed the truth that Good and Evil are relative to the observer and how one person's good could be another person's evil. But at the end of last month's article on Good and Evil I challenged you to contemplate that notion. Now the time has come. Also in last month's copy of Circle News I wrote another article called "The description of existence without the flesh".

You might ask why I am bringing up that second article as it relates to good and evil. The answer is in the article where I describe “What if our journey took us too many planes and each of these planes had different rules requiring different Chakras”

Chakra's of the Earth Plane

“Now imagine a plane of existence which is unfathomable to us... Imagine that there are completely new forms of nature and brand new elements. Would not our form fashion new Chakras to interact with the nature of this new plane?”

Description of the Existence without Flesh

By Pat Powell

The purpose of our form is to host our true essence which is comprised exclusively of pure Thought-Energy. Our form is structured in a way that we may exist and interact within the world around us to achieve the maximum amount of experiences possible.

THE FORM OF THOUGHT ENERGY

Our true form is pure Thought-Energy. Many argue the form our energy consists of 7 Major Chakras and multiple ‘minor’ Chakras, but what if even these systems of Chakras were not absolute. What if the number of Chakras could vary depending on the plane of existence among other factors? What if our journey took us through many incarnations and many planes of existence and each of these planes had different laws of nature requiring different Chakras?

During our journey we might transition to a plane with no matter, no up or down, no air or no fire, etc, etc. In such a plane of existence the need of several Chakras would disappear.

The key point here is to focus on our purest essence which is thought, strip away everything else, we are pure thought at our very core everything else is variable and transitory.

Imagine a plane with no earth, no dirt, no rocks, no fire, no air, and no nature as we know it. In such a plane of existence the majority of what some are taught about their Chakras and how they are tethered to the elements would become meaningless. What would happen to these Chakras that no longer have a role?

Now imagine a plane of existence which is unfathomable to us... Imagine that there are completely new forms of nature and brand new elements. Would not our form fashion new Chakras to interact with the nature of this new plane?

In both of the 2 above examples I assert that our essence would adapt our form, adding new, or taking away some of the Chakras that we are familiar with in order to have our form optimized for the plane of existence that it inhabits. What if I told you that in actual fact our Chakras do not really exist as described to us in the past? What if I told you that we use specific Thought-Constructs existence without the flesh, I lay out how we are thought and our true essence resides in a realm of pure thought. This is key because when we lose the flesh that hosts our energy we return to a pure Thought-Energy form.

This Thought-Energy that is you and me, resides in a being/place for which the laws of reality are formed by thoughts, desires and expectations. I wrote that all things/beings are created from pure thought within this being/realm, even the laws of this being/realm are created from pure thought. Within the being/realm we may exist within 'pocket' realms, which are a corner of this realm which is structured and governed by the specific rules of thought and expectations. Usually we migrate to one of these pocket realms sometime after the death of the flesh. Please note that the diagram is intended to very simplistic and is not meant to show the complete picture.

As I discussed in last month's issue we have the ability to create our own rules for our afterlife, or follow the rules of another's, or be herded into another. It is my understanding that as the Thought-Energy that is us matures and develops we move from one afterlife reality to another and each afterlife reality has its own specific rules that govern it. Or put it another way, if 10 people who pass-away have 10 different beliefs of the afterlife they could inhabit 10 different afterlives. These 10 different afterlives are tied to the ego realms as they are created based upon our expectations originating within the Ego realm. Examples of which would be the Pearly Gates or a realm with dozens of virgins, or Odin's great hall in Valhalla. Each of these afterlife domains has rules i.e. do 'good' get rewarded do 'evil' get punished.

The single thread that ties all of these realms is belief, be it in the Quran or in the Bible, Hindu Bagvadhgita or in the Torah they all state repeatedly the need for the believer to truly believe. One must remember what I wrote in past articles regarding thought and expectations or in other words belief. Thought and expectations create for you a Jewish, Christian, Islamic, Hindu and innumerable others afterlives governed by their own rules. These rules dictate reward and punishments fit for that individual as per the rules of that ideology but once a spirit has graduated from the ego created realms, or the Mortal Planes as depicted on the diagram on the right, the walls between good and evil disappear and good and evil now become nothing more than artifacts of experiences to be coveted. But until your spirit has fully transitioned from the Mortal Planes of flesh and the ego generated afterlife constructions, we are tied to their rules. So yes, there is a rule driven after life which may be driven by reward and punishment but ultimately as our spirit grows we move beyond the concept of good and evil.

that we label as Chakras in order to effect change into our being? What if I told you that we create these constructs and give them characteristics and properties in line with a purpose that we are trying to achieve?

I came to this conclusion because of my experience. Everyone that I have met who sees Chakras only sees them after they have been exposed to the thought of Chakras and their purposes, either through a course, a book or through discussion with someone who themselves believes in Chakras.

I have meet people who see energy and who see spirits but have never seen a Chakra because they do not believe in Chakras so they have not created Thought-Constructs and labelled them the Chakra.

Now picture that you have a job to do but you have no tool to perform that job. What you would probably do is try to find a tool that would match the task at hand. You would search your memory to determine if you had ever come across a tool that would do the job. Once your memory was exhausted you would ask others, or consults books at your disposal. Failing that you would then try to create a tool.

If you were trying to heal someone with poor eyesight and you knew about the Chakra system either through a course or through a friend you would use the Third Eye Chakra as the vehicle to perform the healing.

I have been a well respected healer for several years and I heal people by creating constructs of my own.

I once worked with an individual who had Cataracts. My thoughts brought me in front of the individual's problem eye but the eye was supersized. The eye was at least 4 ft wide and 3 feet high. I then began to wipe my hands across the supersized eye and I began to clear away a white foggy color from the individual's eye. At the end of my healing the individual that I healed reported a huge correction with their vision.

Although someone else might have used a Chakra construct to effect the healing, such as the Third Eye. I chose not to, and If you recall from one of my pervious articles the 2 most important factors in healing are 1; life path and 2; Intention.

Intention is key when it comes to Thought-Constructs. If it is your intention to heal someone's eyes and if you follow the Chakra's teaching you would likely work through the third eye Thought-Construct or you could do as I did and build your own constructs.

In my case I created a supersized eye, but it could have easily have been a purple banana, or a green dog. As long as my intention is to heal that individual, the only thing that matters are my intentions and not the form or method of the healing that I choose to deploy.

This approach will likely be considered deeply controversial to some but that is how I have healed many people. This does not mean that the Chakra systems of tools/constructs are not real, all constructs are real, we just need to choose the form of constructs that best work for us.

The Chakra Thought-Constructs can provide us a excellent readymade, prepackaged set of tools which can be use as a effective method for addressing wellness and health. The key is you need to first empower them with the proper characteristic to do the job at hand. This is done by study and then energised by belief. Or you can use other thought-constructs; the choice is yours.

June 3, 2013 at 3:42 pm

As teenager I was diagnosed with Crohn's disease, and after many years of learning how to deal with it and accept it I had come to a point in my life recently where I wanted to be in charge of my life and that included my health. I had been thinking and research may alternative methods that would help me in my recovery, something that I hadn't shared with anyone. Recently during a morning coffee break with a friend I stumbled upon a promising remedy. Thru a friend I was fortunate to learn of Patrick. I was eager to speak with him and see if he was able to help me in my healing.

My friend arranged for Patrick and me to connect and speak. My first dealing with Patrick was brief and only lasted a few minutes. Our conversation was generic and I didn't share any personal details with him. Patrick and I made arrangements to work together. The first evening I laid quietly trying to focus on nothing as Patrick suggested, but unable to settle as I was a bit nervous and unsure what to expect. As I was lying quietly on the couch I started to become more and more relaxed. I laid on the couch with my arms crossed over my chest. As I lay there still, and clearing my mind of nothing I noticed that my torso was growing hot. As the minutes passed my torso from my neck to my stomach grew hotter and hotter. I uncrossed my arms to try and cool myself, but I noticed that this heat radiated down my left leg to my ankle. The heat grew more and more intense. After laying there for about 15 minute I sat up and felt so relaxed, more relaxed than I had felt in a very long time. I then headed to bed. As I was washing up for bed I noticed that my torso was extremely hot to the touch so was the back of the arms, yet the top of my arms were freezing. My left leg was the same way, hot to the touch on the back, and freezing to touch on the upper side. I found this very odd as I had never experienced such a thing. I went to bed, and that evening and the heat continued during the night.

The next morning I woke up and felt a sense of peace and at ease. Later that morning Patrick called to speak with me. I explained to him that my torso became very hot and my left leg was the same. Patrick stated that it was him and his energy. He then went on to tell me what he saw. He said immediately he saw my esophagus and followed it down to my stomach. He said that it was of great concern and told me that I had something wrong with my stomach, that there was lots of inflammation that he could see; he was unable to tell me exactly what was wrong, but that my digestive system was a mess. I was stunned. How did Patrick know this? He and I had never met, and yet we had spoken once before, how was it that he knew such an intimate detail about me? Going into this process I was had my reservations about this, but after such a powerful statement from Patrick I was sold. I asked Patrick if he was able to help me further with my healing, and he was more than happy to oblige. I look forward to working with Pat, and a happy and health future medication/complication free.
